Although a securities- based line of credit may be an attractive financing vehicle for your client's unique situation, there are also several specific considerations to keep in mind when deciding if it's the right option. Additionally, there are certain risks associated with securities-backed demand lines of credit which may not be associated with other types of financing. For example, a market downturn may cause additional collateral to be required or the repayment of amounts borrowed to be accelerated. In addition, in the event of an uncured margin call, your client's pledged securities may be liquidated. Such a liquidation may cause adverse tax consequences for your client.
